5 Ways To Help Customers

Here are 5 questions to ask customers that help you and them.

Help your customers feel understood by creating conversations, showing expertise, and increasing trust. Ultimately, these questions save time for you and them.

- Do you usually wear sweet, fresh, woody, or bold fragrances?
Not just "What are you looking for?". This question narrows down choices and provides a concise understanding of what your customer wants.
- Do you like scents that get compliments, or something more personal?
Compliment-seekers often buy stronger, bold fragrances, while personal-wear customers may buy softer or skin-close oils.
- Do you prefer something similar to a designer scent, or something unique?
Questions like this will prevent confusion from having too many choices.
- Is this for everyday wear, special occasions, or something long-lasting?
Customers may buy more oils when they hear about options (like day and evening oils or different personalities they can project)
- Would you like to try one on your skin to see how it sets?
Maintining focus on what the customer wants increases the likelihood that they will choose scents they enjoy wearing. Once it's on the skin, your chance for a sale becomes higher.

Essential Oils

Over 60 essential oils, essential oil sets, and price specials

Inhalation

- Use a diffuser.
- Drip essential oil into a bowl of hot water, put your face over the water, close your eyes, and inhale by nose.
- Make a bottled spray or spritz with 10-15 drops of essential oil and 1 oz water.

Topical use

- Drip essential oil into a bath for self soothing treatment.
- Dilute essential oils with a carrier oil and gently rub the oil into pressure points: temples and wrists.
- Add a few drops of essential oils to shampoo, conditioner, and body wash or lotion.
